Poetry.

THE ASPEN TREE.

BY MISS L. E. LANDON.

THE quiet of the evening hour
Was laid on every slumber leaf ;
That purple shade was on each flower,
At once so beautiful, so brief.

Only the aspen knew not rest,
But still, with an unquiet song,
Kept murmuring to the gentle west,
And cast a changeful shade along.

Not for its beauty—other trees
Had greener boughs, and statelier stem ;
And those had fruit, and blossoms these,
Yet still I chose this tree from them.

'Tis a strange thing, this depth of love
Which dwells within the human heart,
From earth below to heaven above,
In each, in all, it pain has part.

It must find sympathy, or make ;
And hence beliefs, the fad, the vain,
The thousand shapes that incons take,
To bind the fine connecting chain.

Like those frail leaves, each restless thought
Fluctuates in my weary mind ;
Uncertain tree ! my fate we wrought
In the same loom where mine was twined.

And thus from other trees sound,
Did I still watch the aspe tree,
Because in its unrest I found
Somewhat of sympathy with me.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

To mark the angel smile whose light
Play's o'er her infant's cheek,
To meet the look from fond eyes bright,
Of careless joys that speak ;
To listen at the early word
From childhood's lisping tongue,
Soft as the loving songs of birds,
Spring's building bower among :

When o'er its snowy eyelid steep
Spreads a soft downy wing,
'Tis hers, with fireless love to keep
Her watch o'er that farthing ;
While round the lips bright smiles still play,
Telling of happy dreams
Her little self in finer clay
That cherub being seems.

'Tis hers through many a lucky day,
Her little ones to see ;
Pursue with bosom light and gay,
Their sport in merry glee,
And oft with laughing eyes they come,
To give the accustomed kiss,
Such joys around our home—
Such joys a mother's bliss.

Mrs. Eleanor Dickinson, (a member of the Society of Friends) has just published "The Mamluk," a Poem, with several miscellaneous pieces, which evince very considerable poetical talent.—The following passage is from the first canto.—Phil. Nat. Gaz

The moon has left her starry throne ;
Her gay attendants, one by one,
Have faded from yon blue concave,
Or dipped their torches in the wave.
Dim night, wrapped in her sable vest,
Has rolled her chariot to the west.
The eastern glows ; a rosy streak
The blushing tints of morn bespeak.
Bright floods of glory, roll unfold
Heaven's portcullis ; rolling liquid gold
Before his radiant disk, the sun
Reclines on ocean as a throne ;
And views around reflected rise,
The splendid radiance of the skies.
Now soars, with light refulgent crowned,
And spreads his golden sceptre round.

GOV. CASS'S ADDRESS.

We have been favored by a friend with a copy of Gov. CASS's Address to the Alumni of Hamilton College, on the 26th August last.—From a hasty perusal, we consider it one of the most splendidly written public addresses we have ever met with.—We extract from this Address, the following eloquent remarks on

THE PRESS.

"In the diffusion of political information, the periodical press is the great instrument of modern times. The wish of Archimides is realized and a place is found where the world can be moved. Only a century and a half has passed away since the introduction of newspapers, and during many years their progress was slow and doubtful. In their infancy, there was little to commend them to public regard. They were mere chronicles of passing events, recording every thing with equal gravity, whether trifling or important. There were no enlarged views, no interesting speculations, no elaborate discussions, political or statistical. But as they attained maturity, their character gradually changed, and they become, what they now are, the repositories of all that is important in the progress of human affairs, and of much that is valuable in science and literature. Their duration is now beyond the reach of fraud or force. In India, in Iceland, in Australasia, at the Cape of Good Hope, in regions first known to history, and in those which history has yet to visit these periodical messengers are sent abroad to instruct, to restrain, and to punish.—Knowledge is diffused with certainty, promptness and economy. The conduct of rulers is scrutinized, the course of their policy is investigated, a movement in any part of the world is spread before the community, and literature, science, and the arts, are carried to the remotest verge of civilization. In republics they are the safeguards of freedom ; in monarchies, they are jealous sentinels, prompt to discern, and fearless to announce, approaching danger ; and in all governments, they are the nerves which convey sensation through the political body. Benefits when common, are rarely appreciated, and the natural elements around us are among the choicest blessings of life, which we enjoy without reflection, but which we could not lose without destruction. If the periodical press, with its rich treasures of intelligence and science, were struck from existence, we should then know how much we had possessed, by feeling how much we had lost.

Had this great source of public instruction and information existed in the old world, how different might have been its destiny, and how rich the lessons of experience transmitted to us! How precious would be a newspaper, printed at the epoch of some of those memorable events which have come down to us in thoughts that breathe, and words that burn." A gazette of Sparta or of Athens, when Xerxes was upon the Hellespont, or Leonidas at Thermopylæ, would be a treasure far beyond the mines of Golconda, when compared with the paragraphs which yet lock out upon the ruins around them. The hopes, the fears, the efforts, the counsels of Greece would be before us, not disguised in the impassioned strains of her poets, nor in the eloquent but partial narratives of her historians, but as they were, in the approaching danger, and the alienations of popular feeling. And with equal interest should we gaze upon a similar monument of the literature and fortunes of Rome, when domestic discord or foreign armies shook her power but not her resolution ; when her citizens were treated to the sacrificial sword, or her great Carthaginian enemy swept her eagles from the field of Cannæ. It is impossible to look upon those great events, familiar to us from history, but seen through a mirage which distorts [illegible] of the absence of many of those peculiar traits which give life to the portraits of modern times. [illegible] men and philosophers, [illegible] on a stage, dressed in the [illegible] fashion, and performing the parts assigned them. But of their private lives, of their peculiar opinions and feelings, of the general state of society, and of the moving influences which operated to all and on all, little has been recorded, and little can be known. Of general facts we have enough and more than enough. Annals, battles and victories, are forever before us, as though we had nothing to learn, but the splendor of conquest, and the [illegible] regardless whose [illegible] "If Philip is wanting to compel [illegible] of antiquity, these publications would have furnished. We should have entered the private dwellings of those who, twenty centuries ago, were as anxious about the cares of this life as we are. Their domestic circles would have been open to us, their [illegible] and parentage, and filial relations [illegible] and the whole constitution of their society revealed. The minute details of manners and customs now gleaned from the comic writers, would be consolidated, in the general view presented to us.—Time would be annihilated, as the steam engine is annihilating space ; and nations, as remote in age as in position, would be brought together."

LETTER FROM AN AMERICAN KING.

The annexed Letter from JOSEPH NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, Ex King of Spain, who has resided for several years past in the vicinity of Philadelphia, is copied from the Philadelphia American Sentinel of Saturday last. It was addressed to an officer formerly serving in the republican and imperial Armies of France.

"Point Breeze, Sept. 14th, 1830.

SIR—I received the letter by which you offer to accompany me to Europe, should circumstances call me there.—Duty alone can induce me to quit this country. My device like that of my brother Napoleon, is all for the French people. I therefore do not consider myself bound by any thing but duty to serve the nation. I have no right to exercise either in my own name or that of my nephew. Government is a want of the people ; to be created or destroyed by them according to its usefulness.—Yet I am now resigned to conform to the national will lawfully expressed. You know that three millions five hundred thousand suffrages called my family to the Empire at a time when foreigners had no influence in France. You may well suppose that I cannot without positively fail to recollect that my nephew the son of my brother, was proclaimed by the Deputies in 1815 ; that my brother the Emperor [illegible] that could [illegible] about [illegible] forego bayonets on [illegible] the Bourbons, and [illegible] execution of so many [illegible] of their country.

I should have set off already [illegible] not see among the [illegible] members of the provisional government, that of a prince with whom [illegible] never can have any thing in common ; being satisfied that any Bonaparte whatever may be the branch to which he belongs, cannot suit my country. I have already told you that the only family [illegible] which the nation will not [illegible] and cannot like, is that of the Bourbons. If that family loved [illegible] was aware of the [illegible] it would have long [illegible] the throne. That [illegible] by blood [illegible] foreign bayonets [illegible] to be the [illegible] of the [illegible] of Paris [illegible] steel of [illegible]

The great [illegible] not yet [illegible] Napoleon [illegible] seen still [illegible] revisited [illegible] he was [illegible] room of [illegible] place where [illegible] innocent [illegible] to be heard [illegible] Europe [illegible] country. [illegible] rest of their [illegible] present, [illegible] Europe?

At the [illegible] of my long [illegible] by what [illegible] and to Napoleon [illegible] of a brother who [illegible] respect more from any other person whatever, because [illegible] many [illegible] I am sure of the sincerity of [illegible] and opinions. [illegible] of St. Helena [illegible] through General Bertrand [illegible] Hudson government [illegible] by my advice [illegible] however, [illegible] that for is a Frenchman ; to let him give France as much liberty as his father gave her equality ; and let him accept for his service, all for the French people.

I have positive assurances that Napoleon [illegible] state of [illegible] is as good a [illegible] and would be well [illegible] and of France. [illegible]

JUJUBE PASTE.

THIS Article has long been used in France and Italy, as a Remedy for Coughs and Colds. In sympathetic Coughs, or such as arise from irritation in the throat and lungs, it is said to be uncommonly efficacious. It is obtained from a species of Plum, the jujube, according to Linnæus of the Rhamnus Zizyphus, and instead of being a Paste, is more properly speaking, a dried Jelly, which being pleasantly pleasant to the taste, is like the Jujube, to be gradually dissolved in the mouth.

VEGETABLE CERATE.

HAIR Restorative and preservative, Vegetable CERATE; simple in its nature and wonderful in its operation. The important discovery of a Vegetable substance capable of restoring and preserving the Hair was accidentally made by an individual who has neither the capacity, nor the disposition to practice deception or fraud. The confidence may be placed on the efficacy and [illegible] of the Vegetable Cerate, and not only in [illegible] and preventing the falling off of the hair, but in producing the neatest lustre and [illegible] of it imaginable; and the public may be assured that its effects will be clearly manifested in the course of a short time by the [illegible] of a vigorous growth of the hair, and effectually preventing its coming out or falling off. The Vegetable Cerate tends to renew and excite the energies of the capillary vessels which constitute those organs that secrete the matter forming the hair; these, like many other organs of the animal body, which have been in a state of dormancy or disease, may be restored to their healthy action, and perform all the functions assigned them by nature.
